

Pebble Mine

The Fine Print

The state's largest newspaper says we had better read the fine print when it comes to Northern Dynasty's proposed Pebble Mine.

We did,
and what we found

Northern Dynasty promised...

"We made a commitment to stay out of Upper Talarik Creek because it is sensitive fish habitat."

Ella Ede, Northern Dynasty – Peninsula Clarion, July 5, 2005

"Forget it," Jenkins said he told company engineers. "I said leave Upper Talarik Creek alone."

Bruce Jenkins, Northern Dynasty – Anchorage Daily News, October 18, 2004

Northern Dynasty broke their promise...

"Northern Dynasty Mines, which wants to develop the massive Pebble copper and gold prospect, filed papers with the state last week seeking water rights to Upper Talarik Creek. If granted, the company could pump water out of the rivers for use in a tailings pond, a type of artificial lake that stores mine waste..."

Anchorage Daily News, July 18, 2006

Northern Dynasty promised...

Jenkins said no cyanide, a toxic chemical, would be used to extract the minerals.

Anchorage Daily News, October 17, 2004

Northern Dynasty broke their promise...

Northern Dynasty is stepping back from its previous statement that it would not use cyanide as part of the mineral extraction process and now could use the toxic and lethal chemical at the Pebble Mine...

Bristol Bay Times, June 23, 2005

Mining companies are quick to make promises – and quick to break them. Alaskans can't afford Pebble Mine. The "process" to approve Pebble is a broken process that puts commercial, sport and subsistence fishing at risk.

OPPOSE THE PEBBLE MINE

<http://renewableresourcescoalition.org>

RENEWABLE RESOURCES
COALITION

